Announcement

I wanted to let the congregation know I have decided to retire at the end of this year, effective 12/31/19. This has not been an easy decision to make.

It has been my honor and privilege to serve this church for over 25 years, the past six as an ordained pastor. It has been the most rewarding and spiritually fulfilling experience of my life, and I only wish I had answered the call to ordained ministry sooner. I look forward to continuing my relationship with this congregation - just from a different seat in the Sanctuary.

Blessings,
Rev. Joanne Blair

As Presbyterians, we are indebted to John Calvin (1509-1564) as the theological founder of our Reformed tradition. His major work (he was a prolific writer who wrote Biblical commentaries, books and pamphlets) was The Institutes of the Christian Religion. First published in 1536, it is a four-volume work that examines God, Jesus, the Spirit and the Church. While some of his beliefs are no longer held by most Presbyterians, wrestling with his writings can help us clarify what we do believe, and in so doing clarify how we are to live as followers of Jesus Christ. All these articles can be found at www.johncalvinforeveryone.org. I hope these articles prove beneficial to your faith journey. Pastor John

John Calvin for Everyone

The Institutes of the Christian Religion: Book 4 – Chapter 4, Part 1 “THE CONDITION OF THE ANCIENT CHURCH, AND THE KIND OF GOVERNMENT IN USE BEFORE THE PAPACY”

In this chapter, Calvin offers a brief history of church government prior to the rise of the Papacy. The role of the Papacy (the Bishop of Rome) and the organization of the government of the Roman Church as it was in Calvin’s age and now in ours, is very different from the organization of church government for the first several hundred years of the early church.

Summary: Calvin’s view of the early church was that they tried their best to adhere to the Apostle Paul’s teachings about church leadership. The early church did so by having the same three orders of ministers as Paul directed. These were presbyters (pastors and teachers), elders who oversaw the government of the church and deacons who were to care for the poor. Calvin also notes that Jerome (347-420), who was a priest, confessor, theologian and church historian, listed five church orders, “...bishops, presbyters, deacons, believers and catechumens (those preparing for making a profession of faith)” (pg. 1069).

Calvin examines the first three of those categories, bishops, presbyters and deacons. He begins with a lengthy discussion of bishops. Bishops (who were presbyters) were first appointed, Calvin argues, to help settle disputes among the presbyters. They were given the “title...in order that dissensions might not arise (as commonly happens) from equality of rank (all presbyters being equal). Still the bishop was not so much higher in honor and dignity as to have lordship over his colleagues” (pg. 1069). The bishop was in fact not only to “carry out what was decreed by common decision” (pg. 1069) of the presbyters and the people but to “co-operate with them” (pg. 1070). Calvin asserts that while bishops surpassed others in dignity, they were subject to the assembly of their peers. (pg. 1070)

In the early church “...both bishops and presbyters had to devote themselves to the dispensing of Word and sacrament” (pg. 107) and “...it would have been considered a monstrous thing for anyone who claims to be a bishop who had not in fact shown himself not to be a true bishop” (pg. 1071). What this means is that all bishops were to be drawn from the ranks of presbyters (pastors) who had learned to be good preachers and teachers (which was not the practice in Calvin’s time in the Roman Church). Archbishop was a position created, again, for the purpose of helping to settle disputes over larger areas. The position was not created for “...lordship as far as the government of the church was concerned” (pg. 1072).

Deacons were given the power of overseeing the income of the church. They were “...to distribute some to feed the minister, some to feed the poor” and were to “...render an account annually of their distribution” (pg. 1072). While bishops were to oversee the work of the deacons, they were not allowed to direct the use of the funds without agreement from the deacons. Archdeacons were created when the wealth of the church became so great that it needed an additional layer of administration. Later archdeacons were entrusted with reading scripture, exhorting others to pray and assisting in communion. These duties were added to help them focus on the spiritual dimensions of their other work.

Reflection: One of the great secrets of the Roman Church is that the church hierarchy as we see it today, as well as the way Calvin saw it, was not always in place. The church, for its first 500-600 years was one in which pastors, deacons and bishops, even if they were nominated by other pastors and bishops, were elected by the people. There was no sense that those on the top (Pope, Cardinals, etc.) had the right to appoint those below them. In fact, it was considered anathema (out of bounds) for any bishop to do so.

Questions:

1. What has been your experience of a church hierarchy? Was it positive or negative?
2. What was your understanding of “who was in charge” in the church?
3. What do you think of Calvin’s view that all ministers/elders/bishops are equal?
